The Soul Partnership

In our day to day lives, where we do the ordinary things such as eat, sleep, work, play, have children, pay our bills and get through life we are not accustomed to looking beyond the person we see in the mirror every morning and thinking of ourselves as anything but ordinary. We are humans, physical bodies existing on and interacting with the earth and yet we are so much more. A higher truth is beginning to dawn upon humanity, that there is more to us than what we have been told or believe and that whatever we know will be challenged beyond our imagining.

This higher truth tells us that there is something more, another aspect to our humanity that is not something that we can see, taste, feel, hear or touch but whose presence is there, on the fringe of our awareness. This aspect of ourselves exists outside the material plane so it is difficult for us to connect with it until we are open to its presence. It is our soul and is the reason for our physical body, our daily life, our thoughts, actions and knowing and understanding its journey gives our life new meaning and explains our purpose.

The soul is more than an important part of our life journey, it is the reason for our journey. Without the soul's contract for healing we have no reason to be here. And yet without the body the soul cannot exist on the material plane. If the soul is such an important part of our life, how can we live without acknowledging its presence? We do but in different ways and as we move through this acknowledgement process, we discover an important truth, that the soul will work with us to heal and waits for us to arrive at that place.

When we are completely unaware of the soul's presence and purpose we live life through the ego so our life experiences can range from a variety of ups and downs to uncontrollable chaos. From the ego's standpoint, there can only be one energy in our life and partnership is not possible. The ego demands control and will put up a good fight to ensure that it receives no interference. Where is the soul while our life is falling apart? It is participating at the level of our karma and soul wounds, which is what we came to heal. Is it reminding us of other alternatives? Yes, but we probably are not aware of what it says because our energetic vibrations are at the level of our karma. So no matter how loudly the soul speaks to us, we cannot hear it because we are not listening.

When we are partly aware of the soul's presence we live in a kind of limbo, where we know that there are other options available to us but either cannot or do not want to acknowledge them. We know that we are suffering but feel that we deserve to suffer, we are not worthy of anything else and our fear of change is greater than our fear of suffering. Do we hear the soul's call for healing? Yes, from time to time, but we are not vibrating at the level of healing, we are still at the level of our karma and suffering. Even though we may try to do some healing work on occasion we are not fully in its vibration so when it does not work or meet our expectations, we see it as another reason to justify our suffering and we continue down this path until the next lessons appear.

With full awareness of the soul's presence we exist in a balance between the spiritual and material, mindful of our physical presence and allowing the soul to participate in our human experience. This is the best and most fulfilling use of the soul's presence and guidance, which is only possible when we are willing to raise our energetic vibrations to the level of allowing healing to occur. This is our call to Spirit and the soul can begin to provide us with the wisdom and understanding that we need to end our suffering and live in peace and joy. The soul reminds us of the unconditional love and divinity that are part of our whole life experience but is lacking when we live solely through the ego. And unlike the ego, the soul acknowledges the benefits of partnership between spirit and material, between human and divine, that is necessary for heaven on earth to exist.

The soul does not force us to do anything and waits for us to acknowledge it knowing that when we have suffered enough, are in enough pain, are scared beyond our fears, we will turn towards it and be ready for healing. This is how we have always made the decision to accept healing and there is another way, where we recognize the soul's role in our healing and learn to work with it before the suffering begins. We have the option to acknowledge the soul's presence from the outset of our journey, partner with it to do our healing work and then explore new vibrations of being, new life experiences that do not include karma and suffering and a new paradigm for us. This is the soul's promise to us and to our frightened ego, that we will remain human and through our divine partnership create a new paradigm of humanity whose foundation is wholeness, connection and partnership with Spirit. Then we will be blessed beyond our imagining because we will have completed the work that we started in partnership with the soul, to heal and release karma from both our individual and the collective consciousness, to create harmony between our spiritual and material beings and to bring the energy of heaven to earth.
